

Heinz Stoewer: Picture "eye of the hurricane" (2020)

This abstract work was inspired by satellite images of hurricanes in the Gulf of Mexico taken by the American Weather Service. The dynamics of this weather phenomenon were transferred to the canvas by Heinz Stoewer in free forms and bright color compositions, reminiscent of the real model only in its spiral structure. One could think of the gray shapes as cloud formations that only partially reveal the view of an island below; but many other things are also conceivable. The painting is dated and signed by the artist on the back.
