

Kirsten Treis: Picture "Flushing seam 1" (2020)

€500.00

I've always loved walking along the water's edge by the sea. I like it when the water washes over my feet from time to time, when the sand is sometimes hard and firm, sometimes soft and muddy, when you can watch the waves coming and going, when the light refracts differently in the sand depending on the humidity and creates color effects. Shells, stones and other finds are most likely to be discovered at the edge of the sea. This impression is from the Baltic Sea. In the picture, a piece of seaweed is being moved through the water, creating bubbles and foam as the water flows down and up. Found at the edge of the sea. Signed and dated.
