Michael Rofka:
Sculpture "dance with fire" (2019)

€6,000.00

For quite a while, the artist has constructed two geometric bodies (tetrahedrons) from steel, respectively, wood. But now he found the right combination, which despite the geometric conception leads to a dynamic, lively sculpture. The two elements seem to support each other, forming a dynamic balance, just like a dance. The steel element was painted orange, but the color was processed using a burner and spatula. This created an expressive lively surface. The wooden element was stained light gray. They may give the impression of a material and spiritual components that complement each other.
