

Christin Lutze: Picture "Upstream" (2024)

The viewer is led into a quiet landscape by a river. The view leads along the water towards three trees in the distance. The space is theoretically also accessible, but the viewing angles are distorted and unreal. The soft, light-flooded colors with delicate, warm and reduced tones make this work very harmonious. The viewer is literally drawn into the space. Surfaces, shapes, colors and a balanced composition of these lead into a world in which the viewer can lose himself.
