Michael Rofka:
Sculpture "Hydroplane" (2010)

€1,200.00

This small wooden sculpture is created from a piece of ash wood. It is symmetrical, with a penetration and slender, organic-dynamic shape. As with other sculptures, the approach here was to meet the character of ash wood, which is also used for bows and gymnastic equipment, with a geometric concept. The result, however, may allow associations. A bird flying flat over water? But it is in the freedom of viewing to see otherwise or simply enjoy the elegant shape. The wood is oiled and the sculpture is mounted on a steel plate.
