

Kirsten Treis: Picture "Wild water 2" (2019)

€1,200.00

Several years ago, we often took the children to a favorite swimming spot on the Ahr in summer. The children loved the shallower areas, fishing, sliding down a barrage and jumping into the stream from the footpath on the other bank. For us adults, there was also the opportunity to swim and enjoy the cool, clear stream water. I love lying on my back and looking up at the sky while swimming in nature. A feeling of freedom. In the "children's pool", the Ahr swirled in small water movements over larger and smaller stones. I used the camera and a short exposure time to "freeze" the flowing water and the rising bubbles, so to speak, and turned them into semi-abstract large-format paintings at home. Taken out of context, it could also be wild whirlpools on a raging river. Signed and dated.
