

Michael Rofka: Sculpture "Venus Moon" (2020)

€1,100.00

The artist has spent a lot of time on astronomy. It belongs to his interest in nature with its phenomena. He knows that Venus has no moon. But what does the title stand for? More about that below. The small sculpture is made of birch wood. It follows in the shaping like some other of his sculptures the infinite Möbius' loop. It has a surface on which one can reach any position without having to jump over an edge. The form is ultimately an expression of a cosmic idea of infinity, which here has been put into a sensuous graceful form. In an ancient natural philosophy, the birch was assigned to Venus in its delicacy and beauty. But the sculpture is really too small for a whole planet. So a Venus moon was created with it. This is mounted on a piece of granite. The dimensions are without this piece, which of course belongs.
