Expressionist portrait shows a person in the city, represented by various graphic elements. The city is closely associated with this person and is represented by the colors red, yellow, blue, orange and black, which can be seen in various shapes and textures in the picture. In the background there are stylized figurative elements that characterize the landscape. Particularly striking are the blue lips of the person depicted, which seem to express a certain vulnerability or coldness. Nevertheless, this person seems to be firmly rooted in his city and to feel shaped by it. Overall, the image conveys a certain tension between the individual and his surroundings, with the city portrayed as a kind of character of the person and the landscape playing an important role in representing this relationship.
