

Sabrina Seck: Picture "money can't buy life - Bob Marley" (2022)

€2,500.00

Bob Marley was a Jamaican reggae singer, guitarist, songwriter and activist and is considered the most important representative and co-founder of reggae music, which became internationally known through him and his band The Wailers from the mid-1970s. From the mid-1960s, Bob Marley identified more and more with the Rastafarian religion. In 1967, he converted from Christianity to Rasta. The Rastafari refer to the Bible, fight against the oppression of black people and hope for their future return to Africa. They wear twisted, matted hair, the dreadlocks, which give them a lion-like appearance. Religion, with its spiritual and mystical elements, also had a great influence on Marley's music.
