

Corinna Rosteck: Picture "Mirror bleaching" (2024)

€3,500.00

The contrast between the materiality of water and vegetation dissolves into flowing lines and rhythmic patterns in the pictorial synthesis. The flow of life, water as a source of energy for growth, becomes symbolic. In the unfathomable density of the reflection, a color space becomes perceptible that raises the question: Do I want to know the location or does the photographic work offer me space for perception and association? Calm, reflecting water surfaces, gently and evenly undulating water, bubbling and splashing water. The eye seeks the structure, the rhythm. In the detail, in the extreme enlargement and in the deliberate inclusion of analog and digital blurring, the structures melt into amorphous illusions that seem very painterly, just as if the camera had swapped brushes and paint
